COURSE OVERVIEW

Making Success Predictable is a self-paced micro-learning course designed to help learners understand why meaningful success is not a pursuit.

In many environments, success is measured through visible outcomes. Wealth, recognition, status, influence, productivity, and accomplishment are often treated as evidence that a person is moving in the right direction. Yet many people eventually discover that external success does not automatically create fulfillment or peace.

This course introduces a different perspective. You will explore one of the core principles that anchors this course: the difference between pursuing success directly and understanding success as the result of aligned living.

You will examine how definitions of success are formed, explore the relationship between alignment and sustainable growth, develop healthier ways to measure success, and understand how stewardship and purposeful living influence long-term impact.

This is a course about building a life where success becomes the natural result of healthy alignment and intentional obedience to principles, purpose, and design.

TIME COMMITMENT

This course is designed for flexibility and personal pacing. We recommend that learners dedicate 1–2 hours per day to engage with the content.
This includes:
Coursework: Teaching videos, instructional insights, guided reflection, and structured learning content
Application: Practical exercises, journaling, personal evaluation, and intentional decision-making activities

WHO SHOULD ENROLL

This micro-learning course is ideal for individuals seeking a healthier and more sustainable understanding of success, growth, leadership, and personal alignment.
It is designed for:

- Individuals questioning how success has been defined in their lives
- Professionals seeking greater alignment between achievement and purpose
- Leaders who want to build sustainably without sacrificing integrity or well-being
- Individuals navigating pressure, comparison, burnout, or performance-driven environments
- Anyone seeking to understand success through the lens of purpose, stewardship, and aligned living

No prior coursework is required.

COURSE SCHEDULE

UNIT 1: Redefining Success
Examines how definitions of success are often inherited from culture, comparison, and external expectations rather than intentionally examined and personally understood.

UNIT 2: Alignment as the Primary Aim
Examines how sustainable success is built through alignment, helping learners understand how purpose, values, vision, and daily decisions must work together to create meaningful and lasting progress.

UNIT 3: Measuring True Success
Provides a new perspective on how success can be understood, measured, and pursued more intentionally beyond many of the common ideas people inherit from culture and society.

UNIT 4: Success as Evidence
Explores how success is often the result of what a person consistently builds, develops, and sustains over time rather than something that simply defines their value or identity.
